Conventionally, since a channel is limited in a conventional optical fiber, when light in a plurality of channels is multiplexed, the plurality of channels are divided into blocks to perform a multi-channeling process. For example, Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open (JP-A) No. 2002-139314 discloses a block type multi-channel coupling adapter module having an alignment adapter portion. In this block type multi-channel coupling adapter module, an alignment adapter is placed between each of a plurality of adapter blocks made up of a light-emitting module, a light-receiving module and an optical fiber. Each of the adapter blocks has a configuration such that an optical fiber is arranged on a first substrate having a light-emitting element array, an optical fiber is arranged on a second substrate having a light-receiving element array, and the light-emitting element array and the light-receiving element array are mounted to the first and second substrates by flip chip bonding or wire bonding. In this block type multi-channel coupling adapter module, the light-emitting element array and the light-receiving element array on the first substrate are connected by an optical fiber. The light-emitting element array and the light-receiving element array on the second substrate are connected by an optical fiber. In this block type multi-channel coupling adapter module, light from the light-emitting element array is converted to light by the light-emitting element array and then is input to the optical fiber. The light in each channel is input to the optical fiber and is input to the light-receiving element array, the optical fiber from which the light input to the light-receiving element array is output. In this block type multi-channel coupling adapter module, the alignment adapter is used to connect the optical fiber on the first substrate and the optical fiber on the second substrate. In this block type multi-channel coupling adapter module, when the alignment adapter is moved, the light-emitting element array and the light-receiving element array are always connected to the optical fiber using
